REDAY, (WORNIES) JANUARY 87, 1831

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11. In the Senate yesterday several petitions were presented and referred to appropriate committees to report on the subject of their prayer. Among these was the petition of Mr. Joseph Nourse of this city, praying the adjustment of his claims against the United States. The petiof Pennsylvania, against the Indian re-aval were also presented by Mr. Barnard and thr. Marks. The Bill to amend the several acts retofore passed relative to Copyright, was tranght up from the House of Representatives and read a tiest time. Judge Peck's trial was named at the usual hour. The depositions of Samuel Merry, John Bent, and Edward Bates, clocked members of the Missouri Legislature, were put in, and read. After which four additional witnesses were examined, which closed the proceedings of the day, and (we understood) at the same time the testimony on the part of the Respondent. The Court then adjourned

Trezvant introduced a resolution relative to a reduction of the duty on imported Wool; but the question of consideration being promptly de-manded, the House refused to consider the resolution—Ayes 73, Noes 111.—Numerous petitions and resolutions were offered .- The bill n the subject of Post Offices was made the speial order of Thursday.—The bill for the relief James Montoe was made the special order for is day. - The bill to authorize the construction f three schooners, passed through Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and was rdered to be engrossed and read a third time tolay.—In committee, also, the bill authorizing he President to select a site for an Armory on he Western Waters, was also acted on in comnittee. The Ayes and Noes were ordered on he question of engrossment, but before they were alled the House adjourned.

A PALPABLE HIT.

"Consistency.-The Richmond Enquirer says that 'throughout his whole life, the President has seemed the man that he was.' Now in 1821, or thereabout, according to the same Journal, the election of the present incumbent was spinken of as what would prove 'a curse to the country.' We have therefore been duly anothematised since the fourth of March, 1828 and this must be what the Enquirer means in the sentence ance for circumstances. In 1824 Gen. Jackson was in a minority-and what to a politican can be a grenter curse? At that time, therefore, he seemed a curse to our neighbor-and that neighbor himself, says Gen. Jackson thas seemed through out his whole life the man that he was." But, do not circumstances alter cases? Certainly What then can be more natural, than that Jack son being a 'curse' in 1824, having few to sustain his pretensions to the Presidency—the seine Jackson, unultered in every respect, but lessing a majority of the People at his back, in 1828, should be all that was perfect?

"Marshal Soult, Minister of war, said that the proposed augmentation of 40,000 men was not wanted. That the government had every means to put the army in the most respectable and formidable state, and that it was persuaded no war would take place. Gen, Richemont read a long memoir, which he feebleness of his voice prevented our hearing. The members of both extremities of the chamber repaired to the foot of the tribune, and listened to the orator with the greatest attention. From what we could recollect, he recommended the instant occupation of Belgium by France; he supplicated France not to trust too highly the friendly assurances of England. Remember, said he, her conduct towards Denmark, when, in time of peace, she destroyed the Danish fleet, on the simple dread of war. England is always guided all the designs of France, which had for their result her aggrandisement and prosperity. She allows us to undertake generous expeditions, and to reap distant laurels; but there rests her benevceived by the sympathy shown for our revolution by the English people, who admire and approve it, because they themselves want the renancial embarrassments alone prevent her going to war. She prevails on us to reject the offers of a nation of brothers who want to join us.

une revolution, "War said he, is a scourge, a legacy of barbarous times. You cannot wish for war, and in order to preserve peace, you are ready to make every sacrifice. The kings are alarmed by old recollections and by dy to make every sacrifice. The kings are a-larmed by old recollections and by recent catastro-phes, we must hasten to remove their fears, by plan 27 THEODORE NICOLET & co showing them our revolution pure of every excess, and confining itself within the bounds of a wise liberty. The riots in Paris have been held out to them as an object of terror; they were also told that a new propaganda, modelled on that of the revolution of 1789, was about to be formed in Paris. This is an error or a calumny, which we have sufficiently refuted by our mode-
