The Cincinnati Ledget tells a story, which may very safely, we think, be hid as 'something new'-list, that a farmer who had but recently been promoted to the high rank of colonel, was one day drilling a company of horsemen, the principal part of whom were mounted on marras, whose sucking colts had been left at home. The colonel seeing the milk streaming down from the poor animals was struck with coffpassion, and suddenly cased, "Halt dismount! MIK MARS 112" and each gallant soldier obeyed the word of their commander.

Haton Rouge Garafte
The Ledger's story is, perhaps, a perversion of a feat said to have been performed fluring the revolution.
Information was received at one of the interior towns of New England, that a party of British horsemen was seen reconncitering the adjacent country. Much alarm as well as patriotism was caused by the news. A doughty citizen immediately proposed to lead such of the Americans as would volunteer, in quest of the enemy. A party of some fifty or sixty was soon assembled, incunted upon such quadrupeds as could be had in the emergency. By far the larger portion were bestride brood mayes, and in the hurry of the oc-assion the young cults were allowed to follow their anxious makers to the scene of business. anxious mathers to the scene of battle. After the party had been some hours on the march, the colts became troublesome in their application for their accustomed food. At this juncture an advanced horse-man returned to the party in breathless hasts with the tidings of the near vicinity of the enomy, who were said to be a little way in the rear of an adjacent hill.— The commander apprehending that the colts might bother the evolutions of his company, if not provided for he forehand our level his men to discounts. or beforehand, ordered his men to dismount, and gave in a voice of determined energy the word of command, in a voice of determined energy the word of command. "Suckle colts." Each rider diamounted, and held his nag (steed) by the bridle until the maternal office was performed. They then remounted, and davked in upon the eaemy—the refreshed colts following in great glee. Upon the shock of arms the American mares and British borress are to mixed nutshed to the control of the c and British horses got so mixed up that the colts could not tell which from tether, and went poking their nones about the flanks of the enemies horses to find their dams-which so disconcerted them that they oldier dismounted by American valor, ten wer thrown by the greations of their own horses in rebut ting this imputation of their gender-a fact which meterially promoted the glorious victory of the day. We have board the name of the valuant Sparks, menoned in connection with this anecdote. In The opera of Anna Boleyn met with a second brilliant reception on Thursday evening at the Orleans Theatre. The house was crowded; the music admirably sung, and CALVE as usual, greeted throughout nost enthusiastic acclamations, and called out at the close of the opera. For the last two weeks the weather has been gerfectly disbolical. Rain, rain, rain with scarcely perfectly disbolical. Rain, rain, rain with scarcely a cessation of torrent. A momentary suspension only reveals a view of a most cloudy and humid looking firmament. There is no hope of a speedy change.— Every thing, at this present writing, looks black
