

Public Adjusters Can Save the Day

When natural disasters strike properties get damaged. Floods, fire, hail storms and wind can destroy homes. When these unfortunate events you must be ready to file your claim with the insurance company. You may need a new roof. All of your property in the basement might need replaced. Insurance is meant to protect us. We pay small monthly premiums in exchange for protection when disaster strikes. Do you remember signing up for insurance? I imagine the sales people were all very nice and friendly. They probably offered you the best deals and tried over and over again to ensure you that their company would take care of you the best.

It is the complete opposite when you try and cash in. Insurance companies do not want to pay out. In fact, when you file a claim of property damage, the insurance company automatically assigns someone to your case. This person is an insurance loss assessor. This person has one function and just one function only. Making sure that you get paid as little as possible. Does that sound pleasant? It might sound ironic, but you will need to protect yourself from the company that is supposedly protecting you. How do you go about doing this? Solicit the help of a public insurance adjuster.

A public adjuster is a third party contracted by you. This person will have your best interests at heart, they will try and maximize your settlement. If you begin thinking you can handle the claim on your own, think again. Insurance companies and their agents have decades of experience in manipulating cases and ensuring minimal payouts. They know all the rules and the ways in between them. You probably are no insurance claims expert. The good news is that public adjuster are experts. They will know how to help you through all the paperwork, documentation and hassle. Your life has been filled with enough stress, dealing with disasters is troubling. A public adjuster will help lower your blood pressure in this time of need.

If possible it is wise to do a small amount of preparation before disasters strike. Collect documentation on everything you own over two hundred dollars in value. Take pictures of your property. After the loss, submit the claim as soon as possible. Contact a public adjuster immediately so that they can begin to work on your case. Navigate the great wide world of insurance claims alone can leave you feeling lost, abused and betrayed by your insurer.
